When the pandemonium of the Cultural Revolution was a distant, softly spoken 15-year-old who loved classical Chinese poetry. Two years adrift in a city torn apart by war and famine, he was a young man with a combative survivor's spirit.

His father, a senior Communist official who had been purged a few years before, was seldom respected. Student militants ransacked his family's home, forcing them to flee one of his sisters died in the murder. Parents were persecuted for their role in the revolution and denounced by his mother, the future president of China on the edge of being thrown into a jail for the children of the revolution.

Visiting the United States this Mr. Xi, 62, has sought to present his as a polished statesman, at ease but wary of the American press. He is attending a state dinner at the House in his honor, set for his first international trip.

In the deadliest tragedy to befall the Hajj, more than 200 people in the desert more than 700 people were killed Thursday in a stampede near Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, on one of the holiest days of the Muslim calendar, raising a host of questions about the Saudi authorities' management of one of the world's largest regular human migrations.

The stampede occurred around 9 a.m. the first day of Eid al-Adha, at the intersection in Mina, about six miles east of Mecca, as millions of Muslims descended on the city for the pilgrimage, or hajj.

The crush appeared to be the deadliest accident during the hajj since 1990, when 1,428 pilgrims died in a stampede in a tunnel leading to the city. It also occurred less than two weeks after a large construction crane was crushed into a building.

break out of its cycle of polarization and analysis to finally unite its power to heal the "open wounds" of a planet torn by hatred, greed, poverty and pollution.

Calling a rostrum never before occupied by the bishop of Rome, the pontiff used a vigorous call to arms to be favored by liberals, including a free defense of immigration, a critique of the excesses of capitalism, an endorsement of environmental legislation, a blurring of boundaries of the sacred and a plea to abolish the death penalty.

In particular, Francis beseeched a nation that generates "disproportionate share of the world's wealth to not money drive its decisions at the expense of humanity."

"Politics is, instead, an expression of the common good," he said, "and it is not good to build up one, the greater common good," he told a joint meeting of Congress in an address that cited American icons like Abraham Lincoln and Pope John XXIII.

After his last Catholic-themed remarks, the pope said:

So some high-end fertility clinics and egg-donor agencies are ignoring the guidelines and paying far more — on rare occasions in the six figures — while donors are shopping around to get the best price.

The case could shake up the $10 million egg-donor market by sparking more negotiation. It is a potent reminder that egg donation is a big business, though one with many more inherent ethical issues than others.

Tapes Portray A Coal Baron Lax on Safety

By SHIRLEY G. WILKING

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Back when he was one of the most powerful and feared men in West Virginia, before a coal mine explosion killed 24 of his employees and exposed his company's shoddy safety record, Donald L. Blankenship was seen as an arrogant, micromanagerial bully. From his lawyer says he was "rude and insulting."

But in the end, another of his qualities — his penchant for secrecy regarding his own character — may help bring Mr. Blankenship down.

Mr. Blankenship is the former chairman and chief executive of Massey Energy, whose Upper Big Branch mine became, in April 2010, the site of the nation's deadliest coal mining disaster in nearly 40 years. Now on trial in federal court here, he is the first coal baron ever to face criminal charges — the central character, prosecutors say, in a historic case of conspiracy to flout health and safety laws in pursuit of profits.

Defense lawyers say they will prove that Mr. Blankenship was deeply concerned with mine safety, and that he had committed no "willful violations" of safety laws, the government asserts.

traverse states money. In recent days, the campaign concluded with the arrest of nine high-profile figures: Donald Trump, a political independent, as a champion for the city, along with his associates and some unnamed wealthy donors. He is accused of corruption and money laundering.

These actions will sustain the fear that the culture of impunity is over and government's will to control of the public sector.

On Second Thought, de Blasio Likes Mike, Sort Of

By ALEXANDER BURNS

As a candidate for mayor, Bill de Blasio sought to differentiate himself from Michael R. Bloomberg, now in his 12-year reign.

But as Mr. de Blasio, a liberal Democrat, approaches the mid-point of his term as mayor of New York City, he has executed an abrupt and deliberate shift in posture.

Over the last month, Mr. de Blasio has repeatedly hailed Mr. Bloomberg, a political independent, as a champion for the city, along with his associates and some unnamed wealthy donors. He is accused of corruption and money laundering.

These actions will sustain the fear that the culture of impunity is over and government's will to control of the public sector.

AFGHANS EXPAND MILITIAS ACCUSED OF RIGHTS ABUSES

BID TO COMBAT TALIBAN

Allies Worry the Forces
Will Become Tools of Local Strongmen

By MUIB MASRAH

KABUL, Afghanistan — With the Afghan security forces gravely challenged by Taliban offensives, the government is moving to rapidly expand the troubled Afghan Local Police program by thousands of members, Afghan and Western officials say.

The move to expand the police militia, prompted by the disastrous loss of the northern city of Kunduz to the Taliban almost three weeks ago, is being described by officials speaking privately as an attempt to boost off-patrol in Afghan cities threatened by the insurgents.

But the expansion also amounts to an open admission that the United States' main legacy in Afghanistan — the creation of nationalized police and army forces, numbering more than 200,000 members — is failing under pressure even before any final American military withdrawal. On Thursday, President Obama called off that pall, originally due at year's end, leaving 5,800 American troops in the country at least another year.

Further, the plan would involve a sudden, and potentially very violent, expansion of the Afghan Local Police, an American-created force that in many areas of the country has become synonymous with human rights abuses even when directly supervised by the American Special Forces. Some of the NATO countries involved in Afghanistan have already expressed concern about the move.

Until recently, reports for funding an expansion of that police force, a collection of local militias with around 30,000 total members, were repeatedly turned down by the United States military. While the forces have performed well in some parts of the country, in other parts, the Kunduz, they are seen as a source of chaos and brutality rather than security.

The Taliban have all of a sudden lost a rush after Kunduz — they have lost the ability to push through important pieces of his agenda.

Mr. de Blasio and his aides have brainstormed ways to repair the relationship with Mr. Bloomberg, according to advisers to both men, some of whom spoke on the condition of anonymity because the relationship between the two men is so contentious.

SUNNY ISLES BEACH

Turnberry Ocean Club

Located at 18501 Collins Avenue, Turnberry Ocean Club jets 54 stories into the heavens, along prime beachfront in Sunny Isles Beach, Florida. The Carlos Zapata/Robert Swedrow-designed high-rise masterpiece embodies the architecture and opulence of Miami's current "it" status. A luxury skyscraper as impressive as its Collins Avenue address, the eye-catching tower embraces the apex of Miami's modernity movement: an amalgamation of glass, steel and towering white pillars intersected by sleek protruding balconies as well as a duo of cantilevered 30th-floor swimming pools and an al fresco fitness center overlooking the ocean. Comprised of 154 grand three to six bedroom units, this project will deliver each residence with direct oceanfront and bay views and six stories of amenities, including the signature Sky Club. Ownership also affords membership privileges at the Turnberry Isle Country Club. Developer and CEO, Jeffrey Soffer of Turnberry Associates continues to redefine South Florida through the company's 50 years of experience.

Kerry warns climate deal will not be legally binding

● Split over Paris measures exposed
● Hostile US Senate spells uncertainty

DEMETRIE STAVROPOULOS
WASHINGTON, VIRGINIA
POLITA CLARK — LONDON

John Kerry, the US secretary of state, has warned that the Paris climate change talks will not deliver a "treaty" that legally requires countries to cut carbon emissions, exposing international divisions over how to enforce a deal.

The EU and many other countries have long argued that the accord due to be finalised next month should be an "international treaty" containing legally binding measures to cut emissions.

But at an interview with the Financial Times at the State Department, Mr Kerry said that the Obama administration is eager to reach a deal in Paris, but not one with legally binding measures because these would strengthen arguments that the deal is not a treaty.

Class apart Big tech takes over as MBA graduates shun banking careers

LAURA NOONAN — LONDON
BEN MCLENNAN — NEW YORK

Graduates from the world's top 10 business schools are 40 per cent less likely to choose a career in banking than they were before the financial crisis, according to a survey by the Financial Times.

Wall Street's biggest banks, including Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan, have been displaced by tech companies such as Amazon and Google as graduates shun the uncertainty and long hours of finance in favour of the post-2008 boom.

Analysis by the Financial Times of the career paths of graduates from the top 10 MBA programmes shows just 10 per cent are now choosing banking as a career compared with 17.4 per cent in 2008.

The 6.4 percentage point drop translates into a 40 per cent difference in banking's popularity before and after the financial crisis.

Wall Street's biggest banks, including Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan, have been displaced by tech companies such as Amazon and Google as graduates shun the uncertainty and long hours of finance in favour of the post-2008 boom.

Challenges US tech rivals

European move in Europe

Companies to ease European fears by opening more data centres in the continent since they were still exposed to US surveillance by US agencies.

"We need to earn trust of our global customers and operate globally," said a Microsoft executive.

US software companies said they were foreign customers to build new European facilities that are not subject to US surveillance.

Microsoft's chief executive said that the data of European business customers, some of citizens, could be complicated negotiation between US and EU politicians on a transatlantic data sharing pact known as "Safe Harbour". Talks have been falling for months over the issue of surveillance.

Last month, Europe gave a stinging rebuke to the transatlantic alliance, scrapping a 15-year pact that allowed US tech groups to ship personal information about European citizens wholesale to the US.
